BACK TO OFFICE TREATS

Bid to scrap WFH

FIRMS are trying to eradicate Britain's work from home culture by offering staff incentives such as free flights overseas. A major push is under way to get staff to leave their homes and 'come back' to the office. This is part of a broader strategy to boost productivity and reduce costs. Many companies are offering incentives like free flights, gym memberships, and other perks to encourage employees to return to the office. This move is seen as a bid to scrap the 'WFH' (work from home) culture that has become prevalent in recent years.

A sale fail for Calvin

OF CALVIN HAD to be a success. The 10-year-old boy's bionic leg was a major triumph for the team that designed it. The leg is made of a lightweight material and is controlled by a small computer chip. It allows Calvin to walk and run like a normal child. This is a significant milestone in the development of bionic limbs for children.

Mechanical fault blamed for ferry's grounding

By ALAN STODOLSKY

A ferry which ran aground in Orkney, triggering the ill-fated evacuation of 161 passengers, believed to have suffered a "mechanical failure" of the Marine and Coastal Agency (MCA) boat.

The incident on Saturday evening happened three days after Peninsular Ferries incurred a service on Peninsular Ferries' Outlines-Orkney route - and just 8 days after the MCA issued a safety certificate to carry passengers following the work in Birtles.

Peninsular Ferries said smoke was detected in Peninsular's engine room before it grounded shortly before reaching its dock at St Mary's gairloch, where there was also...

Forbes rejects claims she is plotting 'coup'

By CONOR MATCHETT

Defeated SNP leadership candidate Kate Forbes has vehemently denied claims she and "shadow cabinet" allies are plotting a "coup" to overthrow Prime Minister Rishi Sunak.

Posting photographs of a highland cow on social media, the skye, Lochaber and Badenoch MSP described the latest reports of "leak" as "ridiculous".

She wrote: "I'm busy enough contributing to policy debates, supporting the party & working in the constituency, where there are thousands of lives."

Crown set to appeal 'lenient' sentence of rapist spared jail

By LUCINDA CAMERON

Scotland's Lord Advocate has said the Crown will appeal against the sentence of a man who was spared jail for raping a 13-year-old girl, on the grounds that his "unlucky" victim was not raped.

Sean Hogg, 34, was sentenced earlier this month at the High Court in Glasgow to a community payback order of 200 hours of unpaid work after being convicted of rape.

"My client still does not understand why Hogg was allowed to go on with his life when he had raped her, she wonders how many girls will think there is no point in reporting the offence."

"She feels that in the end she was failed by our justice system, but today once more she has some hope that justice will be done."

Scottish Conservative justice spokeswoman Jamie Greene said: "The Lord Advocate is quite right to support this sentence - no doubt driven by the public outcry over the original sentence."

Snatch and grab: 'Pricelless' moment as baby takes Kate's handbag

A one-year-old boy snatched the Princess of Wales handbag on a visit to the Waltham village of Abernethy.

Lady Louise reacted on the spot to the theft, as she stepped to talk to mother-of-two Lucy Williams.

Kate left Dairied to play with in her several minutes as she spoke to on her visitors before carrying back to receive it. The "pricelless" moment occurred at the end of a trip to the Crown Memorial Garden yesterday.

Starmer says Sunak advert was not racist

By DAVID LINGH

Labour's attack against Sunak's advert for the Conservative Party was not racist, Sir Keir Starmer has suggested.

The opposition leader defended his party's ad, which depicted the Prime Minister's face alongside a sign that said "I'm not racist, I'm just a Tory".

"I don't think it's racist. I think it's a fair comment on the current situation. It's not about race, it's about the fact that the Tories are the only party that has a racist party."

Labour would 'clean up politics'

By DAVID LINGH

A Labour government would "clean up politics" and replace the government's power to appoint a chairman of the BBC with an independent process, Sir Keir Starmer has said.

He suggested the party would reform the system in order to prevent the return of "stagnant" and "corrupt" leadership.

The role is currently decided through an open competition of candidates who are interviewed by an advisory panel, but the prime minister has the final say.

Lifeboat volunteers set for a brush with the Law at North Berwick

Julie Douglas

The town of North Berwick Lifeboat Station are equipping the boat out for their latest fundraising venture. Volunteers from across the station have pledged to climb North Berwick Law everyday for a month in support of the RNLI's Mayday Mile campaign.

In support of a photograph of the crew with the iconic lighthouse in the background, the challenge will see them walk more than three miles a day - from the beachhouse to the summit and back again - checking in with the station several hundred times in total.

Laura Anderson, chair

Taken in 2010 with the Victorian era camera, the photograph has helped inspire RNLI volunteers' fundraising.

A view of the Law from the lifeboat station was captured by travelling photographer Jack Lowe in 2020, as part of his mission to capture all 230 RNLI lifeboat stations with his Victorian-era camera. Jack said: "When I make the time portraits, I always try and incorporate an element as far as possible as that any body among their photos can immediately place it.

"One of the first things that struck me when I arrived at North Berwick RNLI was how the lifeboat station building seemed to float in the town - they report of the fabric, so I wanted to reflect that in the photograph.

"It was great fun to make and, like that I'll stand, very much the product of a successful team effort."

Limited edition prints of Jack's work, which support the charity, are available on the Lifeboat Station's report website. To support the challenge go to edinburghnews.com/p/edinburgh-berwick-rnli-volunteers-join-230-lifeboat-stations

CHILDLINE ADVICE

By Darren Worth, Childline senior supervisor, North of England

Keeping young people safe on livestreaming and video apps

Along with gaming and social media, livestreaming can be a major part of many young people's lives, though it might not be as obvious as my adult friends think.

Childline is providing a broad range of advice to help young people stay safe online, including the importance of being honest to the person who is streaming and, in some cases, just 'switching off'.

Children and teens are spending more time than ever on livestreaming and video apps.

That means it's more important than ever for us to have the right advice.

Like any activity, it is important to use young people's tools of choice responsibly. Like any regular hobby, staying hydrated and well-rested, and making sure they are comfortable.

If a young person is leading the stream through, they may not be the other way round. It's important to be aware of the risks of being on a stream, such as having to deal with trolls and bots, or having to give out personal information.

By helping young people understand privacy settings, reporting or blocking any bullying or abusive behaviour, and setting time and spending limits, we can help keep young people safe on the stream.

It's important that when people stream, they make it as safe as possible for everyone involved.
