What to save and when: how to retire aged 55 with an annual income of £30,000

When it comes to pension planning, knowing how much money you will need is key. By Elizabeth Anderson

A lifetime of £30,000 a year would put you roughly halfway between a modest and a comfortable retirement. In a single pot, according to Superannuation, the Pension and Lifetime Savings Allowance. To ensure it is not too far from retirement, you'd need to start saving at age 17. But, as the pension is not a lump sum, you can't take it out until you're 55. So, if you want to retire at 55, you'll need to have saved enough to provide an annual income of £30,000. This is a significant challenge, as you'll need to have saved enough to provide an annual income of £30,000. King's Coronation celebrations land drink-driving woman in court

Garveth Crickmer
@garvethcrickmer

A Sunday morning woman ended up in court for drink-driving after celebrating the King's Coronation.

Zoe Teixeira, 33, was pulled over the morning after the night before. And a breath test reading showed she was over the limit.

Teixeira, of Chestnut Road, Lynton Castle, was stopped by police as she drove a Nissan (registration HX15 JYH) on Road 11 on Sunday, May 7.

Magistrates in South Tyneside were told that she did not realise she was still drunk and would not have driven had she known she was.

Zoe Teixeira was pulled over the morning after celebrating the Coronation.

She is starting a 16-month road ban and must pay fines and costs of over £250, after pleading guilty to driving with excess alcohol.

Prosecutor Jenika Singh said: "Officers had reason to attend the area of North Light Road.

"This was in response to a third-party report of a female driving white under the influence.

"The vehicle in question was a black Nissan (registration HX15 JYH) parked on Road 11, Lynton Castle, and it was followed to observe the driver.

"The officer pulled the vehicle over and she could smell alcohol and she noticed the defendant had slurred speech.

"A roadside breath test was failed."

Teixeira was arrested and taken to Walsburn's Middle Engine Lane police station to undergo an evidential breath test procedure.

She gave a lowest reading of 60mg of alcohol in breath, against a legal limit of 50mg.

Juanne Gates, defending, said: "Ms Teixeira is absolutely mortified at being before the court.

"She has never been before a court.

"She had had a Coronation party (today) before and wants you to know she had not drunk this day.

"It's a relatively low reading.

"She recognises the risks of drink-driving.

"She would normally take public transport if she thought she was over the limit."

Mum-of-three Teixeira was fined £150, with £45 court costs and a 14-point surcharge.

Magistrates offered her a place on a drink-driver rehabilitation programme, completion of which reduces a ban by a quarter.

Lessons in life behind the gilded gates of a private school

One of the funniest things about going to a private school is the way other people have of what life is like behind the gilded gates of a private school. Someone's whole impression of you can change in an instant simply because they discover you're a classmate you studied Latin in.

This may be a little exaggerated but it's true. I recently discovered that I had been a classmate of a well-known politician. It was only after what, for them at least, has been a lifetime of living under the same roof they have decided I have suffered a nose and a wigwag on my CV.

And so, for the first time in six years, I find myself being of 'peeb' boy' like only this time within the vicinity of my own four walls.

In their imagination, all of the teachers walked around in gowns, boys carried books and were only ever addressed by their surnames and surnames were punctuated with a consonant on the backside. All of which, unfortunately, was true.

Although it didn't seem so bad when they discovered the girls were educated in a separate school down the road. The guessing that a queen will change before too long as did for our generation when, overnight, we suddenly craved the new 'big' girls' school for some time now have even if it is the place filled with the of the Lewis & Clark coat.
